Document 3: JP 2011-210032 A (HITACHI, LTD.) 20 October 2011, entire text, all drawings

The invention as in claims 1-20 is novel and involves an inventive step in relation to the documents cited in the ISR.

Document 1 discloses a system in which a plurality of virtual machine servers that implement virtual machines are connected through a network wherein, when an earthquake occurs, the system determines the virtual machines that are to be transferred to a different virtual machine server on the basis of the estimated time until the earthquake shock wave arrives and the estimated strength thereof, and executes the transfer. Document 1 also discloses the feature, when it is determined that the transfer cannot be done by the estimated earthquake shock wave arrival time, of making the transfer within the time by dividing the virtual machines into segments and transferring thereof to a plurality of virtual machine servers, taking into consideration the transmission capacity of the communication line.

Document 2 discloses a system wherein a plurality of servers geographically distant from one another are connected by a network, wherein, if a disaster strikes a server, the system transfers the applications on that server to another server and performs recovery from the disaster.

Document 3 discloses a system in which a plurality of data centers are connected by a WAN, wherein if a disaster is predicted in the region where one of the data centers is located, the virtual machines on the servers in that data center are migrated to servers of another data center.

However, none of the documents cited in the ISR discloses the feature of "a first virtual machine implementation device, in response to instructions to move a first virtual machine, divides the data related to the aforementioned first virtual machine into segments and transmits the segmented data to a second virtual machine implementation device via a first network device of network devices, the aforementioned first network device determines if it is possible for the segmented data transmitted from the aforementioned first virtual machine implementation device to be transmitted to the aforementioned second network device disposed on the aforementioned second virtual machine implementation device side, and if transmission is not possible, the segmented data is
