The invention as in claims 1-5 is not disclosed in any of the documents cited in the ISR, and is novel and involves an inventive step. In particular, none of the documents discloses a nonaqueous electrolyte secondary battery comprising a positive electrode having a positive electrode mixture layer including a first positive electrode active material and a second positive electrode active material, a negative electrode having a negative electrode mixture layer including a lithium titanium composite oxide as a negative electrode active material, and a nonaqueous electrolyte including a lithium salt having an oxalato complex as an anion, wherein the first positive electrode active material is a Co-containing lithium transition metal oxide and has a volume per mass of  $8 \text{ mm}^3/\text{g}$  or more with respect to pores having a pore diameter of 100 nm or less, the second positive electrode active material has a volume per mass of  $5 \text{ mm}^3/\text{g}$  or less with respect to pores having a pore diameter of 100 nm or less, the volume per mass of the pores having a pore diameter of 100 nm or less in the first positive electrode material is set to 4 times or more the volume per mass of the pores having a pore diameter of 100 nm or less in the second positive electrode active material, and the amount of the first positive electrode active material is set to 30% by mass or less of the total amount of the first positive electrode active material and the second positive electrode active material. Meanwhile, because of such a configuration, the present invention exerts an advantageous effect that Co eluted from the first positive electrode active material with charge and discharge cycles migrates to the negative electrode, and a coating film is formed on the surface of a lithium titanium composite oxide by the reaction of said migrated Co and a decomposition product derived from the lithium salt having an oxalato complex as an anion in the nonaqueous electrolyte, thereby suppressing gas generation associated with charge and discharge cycles.
